CANAL PROBLEM HARD TO SOLVE.

Technical Conditions Involved.

Would Be an Unpatriotic Move.

The general interest in the question as to what shall be the future of the canals of New York State led to many answers being WITH A DIME FOR received by the Engineering News to the letter of inquiry which the expert commission, appointed by Governor Roosevelt, sent out on May 1 asking for facts and that binds every American heart to Admiral Dewey and creates a to Admiral Dewey and creates a received by the Engineering News to the opinions on the subject.

The News published this circular letter of inquiry in its issue of May 11. This document suggested the following five solutions as among those possible:

000,000 or $24,000,000 in all.

(2) To enlarge the present locks on the Eric Canal to a length of 260 feet, a width of 26 feet and a depth of 11 feet, making of 26 feet and a depth of 11 feet, the suitable for boats 25 feet wide, 125 Admiral Dewey is pleased with the reception

River from Lake Eric, with a depth of 12 feet, and suitable for barges of 1,200 tons to 1,500 tons, which can be towed on the lakes if desired. The cost of carrying out this project was estimated at $50,000,000.

(4) To construct a ship canal with a depth of 20 feet to 30 feet, suitable for lake and ocean vessels of 5,000 tons to 10,000 tons capacity at an estimated cost of $200.

(5) To abandon the canals entirely and dispose of the property interests therein on the best terms which can be secured.

Out of the fifty-six replies received only one writer advocates outright the abandonment and sale of the canals by the State, although several express doubt as to the wisdom of spending any more money on them for improvements.

There is a unanimity of opinion, too, to the effect that the canals as they now stand are out of date as transportation lines and that they are becoming of less commercial value every year.

Different Ideas of Citizens.

Summarizing the replies numerically as well as it is possible to do, eight advocates with a depth of 12 feet, and suitable for lake and few weeks to complete all preparations for his reception, which includes, neither last nor least, the Loving Cup.

There is no time to lose in completing this part of his welcome home. Many hundered more dimes are still necessary before the cup can be perfected.

Citizens here and elsewhere, realizing this, are sending dimes for their families and friends, in order that this Loving Cup shall be an absolutely representative token of American esteem for Admiral Dewey.

One day's mail alone shows the varied sources from which the dimes are sent.

well as it is possible to do, eight advocate the completion of the present project, thirteen favor the second project to enlarge the locks, sixteen suggest the construction of a barge canal as the best solution of the problem, and six or eight advocate the construction of a ship canal, but differ considerably in their ideas of the best route for such a large waterway. Other routes a large waterway. Other replies

Reasons for Enlargement.

"Whatever is to be done toward improving the canals should be done quickly, and the present project permits of the earliest completion of any of the plans proposed. The interests to be conserved by State canals should be primarily State interests, cheap transportation for the farmers in the western portion of the State, developing industry and creating employment along the banks of the cunal, and maintaining the commerce of Buffalo and New York, which results from the transshipment of goods at those cities.

"The present deepening is the utmost change that can be accomplished on the present routes. Greater enlargement is prohibited by the present large aquednets, by reason of land damages, the enormous spoil banks, the Interference with other traffic, and by the large bridges and ferriages that would be required.

"Any other plan also means the practical throwing away of what has already been done, while by the continuation of the present project advantage may be obtained from the $9,000,000 which has been expended."

Arguments for Second Plan.

In favor of the second plan proposed, it is impossible for the canal beauty hold the commerce with the proposed. It. Desmond J. H. Galt, hold the commerce with the present ed boats, as the prices for carrying grain other freight must be largely reduced order to retain the business, which can be be accomplished by the use of much gre boats.

To enlarge the locks will at once make it sible to build a new fleet. This plan and double the capacity of the boats hout deepening the canal, and at a small by as compared with the first plan, onething must be done to encourage the ding of new boats. Owing to the fact five enlargement of the locks of the all has been in anticipation for several sections. Proceedings of the boats have been built will there be until this question is set and the work underston.

could be considered later, during which time new boats would be built of the larger size, sultable for 8-foot or 9-foot draught; and could be operated successfully with the present depth of water by cleaning out the could and straightening a few short hends. The capacity of the boats could be nearly doubled at once.

Railroads Are Interested.

The arguments against a barge canal are princhally the great expense and the low rates at which the railroads are carrying freights.

There are plenty of arguments against a barge canal are princhally the great expense and the low rates at which the railroads are carrying freights.

There are plenty of arguments against a barge of these objections are vague in character. They assed that such a course is upparticular and unfair for the projectors of the canal system.

The mere commercial calamity and unfair for the projectors of the canal system.

The mere commercial calamity and unfair for the projectors of the canal system.

The mere commercial calamity and unfair for the projectors of the canal system.

The mere concrete objections are that if the canals are abandened a great regulator of railway rates will be lost. In fact, from any point of view the problems presented are of a most intricate character and will require a thorough study of the technical and commercial conditions.
